After doing so, other projects including an existing solution cannot load the service reference anymore because the file paths are invalid. When I rebuild the solution the new changes are copied into the original solution and the reference is broken. In my particular case this error occurs after creating the reference for existing classes that have the same name in the original project. Are there any possible workarounds for this problem? A: Try deleting the project from the solution, then recreate it. That should stop the problem. You can also specify where to find the WSDL file if it changes during the referencing process. In your project settings go to "Web Service Reference" and in the "Add New..." dialog box, select "Web Reference". Then in the "Location" section, you'll be able to point to a specific location. Are free radicals or the immune system (white blood cell lysate or immune serum) responsible for bone loss in adjuvant arthritis? A systematic review and meta-analysis. Systemic inflammation, free radicals and autoimmunity have been implicated in the pathophysiology of bone loss in chronic inflammatory diseases, and we aimed to establish whether a similar relationship exists for bone loss in rheumatoid arthritis. To determine whether in vitro and in vivo immunologic studies support the hypothesis that systemic inflammation and/or free radical production are responsible for bone loss in rheumatoid arthritis. Systematic review using MEDLINE (1966-1996) and the bibliography of articles was conducted using search terms for rheumatoid arthritis, adjuvant arthritis, free radicals and bone. Relevant studies were reviewed and data were extracted and weighted according to the presence or absence of a free radical defense mechanism in rheumatoid arthritis. The literature search identified 126 articles, of which 22 were selected for further evaluation. Twelve articles met the selection criteria. We found that bone loss in
